ABSTRACTS

This study explores the evidence for the existence of God through an examination of scholarly works and philosophical perspectives. It delves into renowned authors' perspectives on the subject, providing a comprehensive overview of the arguments put forth throughout history regarding divine existence. The exploration begins with authors who present philosophical arguments for the existence of God through logical reasoning and introspection. It also investigates anthropological and moral arguments for God's existence. The study examines both classical and contemporary authors, such as Thomas Aquinas, Immanuel Kant, and Richard Swinburne, to understand their perspectives on the existence of God. Counterarguments challenging the existence of God, as presented by philosophers like David Hume and Friedrich Nietzsche, are also considered. Through a critical analysis of these arguments, the research aims to shed light on the diverse philosophical and theological discussions surrounding the existence of God. It is important to emphasize that this research does not aim to conclusively prove or disprove the existence of God, but rather seeks to provide a balanced and informative exploration of the topic.
